Origins of People's Library Movement in Kerala

The paper traces out the history of a highly specialised and efficient service with reserved information, organised and managed by the people, that existed in ancient Kerala. The paper also explains how the influence of this tradition and the requirements of the educational, social and political reform movements of the latter half of the Nineteenth Century caused the establishment of thousands of small libraries in villages that gave birth to a unique people's library movement in Kerala.

The concept of public library is not new in the principle of free access than to anything else. The principle that libraries are for all permeated right down the ages. In ancient days educational and cultural activities were mostly connected with religion. Theology laid down the law and rules of conduct. Among them was the belief that free gift of knowledge and the services-books would earn merit for the giver in this life and the life after. According to Manu the best service would earn more merit than the gift of the whole world. This belief encouraged the rulers, scholars and philanthropists of the ancient times to promote knowledge, preserve such records and render service to the needy.

1. Scholar Homes of the People

Library systems of the ancient with accumulated knowledge in ancient times in India, wherever present, connected with educational activities. In those days, as in other parts of India, education was imparted in Kerala through the Gurukula system of education. Individuals adopted their family occupations, in such a way that it would blend with the teaching-learning process that was to be
